

At A Glance: DOMTAR'S DRYDEN MILL

Domtar's Dryden Mill is located in Northwestern Ontario, along the Wabigoon Chain of Lakes. Originally discovered in the Canadian gold rush during the 1800s, Dryden is known for its diverse culture and outdoor adventures, even while representing the smallest community in the entire province of Ontario. With their many natural riches, the Dryden community was well suited for pulp and paper production, and represents the ideal place to call home for mill workers and outdoor enthusiasts, alike.

The Basics:

- The Domtar Dryden Mill is located in Dryden, Ontario and is one of Domtar's 13 pulp and paper mills in North America.
- The mill has one pulp line with an annual pulp capacity of 328,000 tons.
- The Dryden Mill produces Northern Bleached Softwood Kraft pulp, which is suitable for a variety of end-uses, including premium paper towel and tissue, as well as specialty paper grades.

ECONOMIC CONTRIBUTIONS:

- Domtar's Dryden Mill has an estimated regional economic impact of $603.4 million.
- The Dryden Mill supports 353 local jobs.

- In 2013, the Dryden Mill contributed $97,000 in grassroots giving to the local community.

About Domtar:

Domtar is proud to be a pioneer in sustainable forestry, a North American job creator, an investor in our local communities, and a consistently reliable and transparent business partner to our customers.

As a Fortune 500 company, Domtar employs nearly 9,000 people throughout North America, enriching regional economies and local communities. For every 100 jobs at Domtar mills and converting facilities, 325 additional jobs are created outside the company – many within the surrounding communities. Since 2012, Domtar's Corporate Community Investment Committee has donated over $4 million in support of charitable and philanthropic organizations.

The North American paper industry as a whole supports hundreds of thousands of local jobs.
